Features Macros Macros and dialog boxes are often used in Microsoft Office applications. Macros are typically created using the VB programming language, but they may be created using other programming languages as well. Macro buttons

Macros are used in many applications to simulate a user pressing a key combination. For example, in Word, a macro is used to send a letter if the letter command is used on the keyboard. Macro keystrokes A macro is a series of keyboard keystrokes that are used to simulate pressing specific buttons or menus on the application. For example, a macro to open a Word document is created by recording a series of keystrokes that simulate pressing the "File" menu, the "Open" command, and the "Microsoft Word for Windows" program icon, then pressing the ENTER key. Macro recording and editing For the most part, a macro is recorded by pressing a key combination and then recording the series of keys used to simulate that key combination. If a user attempts to edit a macro after it has been created, there is a risk that the edited macro may not function properly. Enhanced macro features In addition to recording macro keystrokes, KEYMACRO also offers several enhancements, including: Editing macros KEYMACRO's VB

macro code editor enables the user to view and edit the code associated with a macro. For example, the code editor may be used to change the macro name, the macro button text, or the macro buttons assigned to the macro. Supporting additional languages In addition to recording and editing VB macros, KEYMACRO is also capable of recording and editing Visual Basic 6 macros, Java macros, Visual Basic.NET

macros, and the Microsoft Visual C++ VCL macros. Caching macros Recording macro functions results in a large amount of data. This data may be compressed into a file that stores the macro as a compact binary sequence (CAB) file. This type of file is not often used to store macros. KEYMACRO can save these functions as a CAB file. Users may add CAB files to the program's cache to speed up the macro processing time when more macros are run.
