Both patients had remission at 6 and 14 months, respectively, without the development of progressive disease during follow up. At median follow up of 25 months both patients are alive. A: You're missing the forward slash before the NUL: @echo off start /min /wait c:\path\to\file.exe Use @echo off /on because text immediately after the start command will be processed before it is passed to the program. This is convenient to hide commands you don't want to run in case the command executes the batch script but you don't want the command to run the batch script, such as pause. It's also convenient for starting programs that won't run until they are finished. Use start /min instead of start /wait to run the program in the background. Stop the program with Ctrl+C. Note that what this will actually do is wait 2 minutes and 1 second; I can't imagine why you'd like to run a program for 2 minutes without waiting or without "losing" the main batch script. You should also use start /min and don't run a /wait after start. It's worse to generate a file with a GUI program and wait for the user to close it when that's not what the command wants you to do. There's another problem, but it's unrelated to your specific question.
