[A new finding on renal cancer: hexosaminidase A, B and C in serum and urine: theoretical aspects]. The presence of urinary and serum hexosaminidases was examined in 43 patients with renal cancer and 20 healthy controls. The intracellular metabolites were assayed using purified urinary and serum hexosaminidases. The patients were divided into two groups according to the stage of the disease (I to IV). No hexosaminidase was detected in the serum of either patients or controls; when compared to the healthy controls, patients with renal cancer had a significantly increased level of hexosaminidase B in urine. The presence of hexosaminidase in the urine of patients with renal cancer may be a useful diagnostic tool. The tests indicated that the elevation in the urinary hexosaminidase B activity was not the result of the alterations in the glycosaminoglycan degradation observed during the tumorigenesis process.

Zacatecas, October 8, 2019 (Venezuelanalysis.com) – The governor of the state of Zacatecas, which borders the state of Morelos and has historically played a pivotal role in the construction of the country's oil industry, has agreed to temporarily shelve civil protests. The decision came as local oil workers and Indigenous community members gathered in the state's capital, in an ongoing protest demanding political change in the OPEC nation. The clashes are related to a December 12 incident in which security forces arrested over 70 Indigenous activists and community members, who were eventually released on bail following protests. "The dialogue and negotiations between the state of Zacatecas governor and the different sectors and representatives of the state were fruitful, and following a sensible reflection, the governor of the state has agreed to an unconditional suspension of the protest actions," read a press release issued by the state government on Friday. "This suspension of actions is limited only to the Tuesday and Wednesday protests," it added. The action could be related to the recent breakdown in talks between the government and the opposition to negotiate a solution to a wave of violent clashes. On Sunday, Venezuelan president Nicolas Maduro called on public workers to block roads in protest against proposed cuts to pensions and salaries. Workers nationwide were instructed to go on strike and to "ask for reforms," in the former military barracks, which have also been taken over by anti-government demonstrators. "The action will take place in the following days: the first day, Friday, in the states of Guárico, Zulia, Aragua, Bolívar, Carabobo, Lara, Nueva Esparta, Miranda, Barinas, Zulia, Táchira, Anzoátegui, Sucre, Monagas, Cumaná, Trujillo, Táchira, Portuguesa, Aragua, Carabobo, Barinas, Guárico, Zulia, Bolivar and Nueva Esparta," read a statement from the workers union, SUTEP. The strike was met with opposition from the government and opposition leader Juan Guaido. Guaido is calling on workers to support the "peaceful restoration of democracy," which he claims is being blocked by the government of Maduro. "The key is that workers don't
