Action - Use your hands and fingers to play. Control - use your thumb to control. Emotional Narrative It's your first day at Travel Camp. You feel the first season's charm. Bodies are in pairs, but you're alone. The rain is pouring down, the wind is storming through the forest, and you're alone. It's not that you want to stay by yourself. You're just afraid of meeting someone. Every time you meet someone, you end up feeling too shy to begin a conversation. You keep a distance, this is the first time to spend all by yourself, and it's scary. You've never faced this situation before. The camp officials promised that you'll be fine. For now, they'll let you stay for a short while. After a few weeks, Zack's gone. He left for no particular reason. He did not even say goodbye. You stayed in your cabin with nothing. All of a sudden, everyone began to ask you where he is. You keep an eye on the hill, but he still does not show up. The next day, he appears in the middle of the village. What happened? Did he leave for good? [info] Your best friend Zack. Where did you go? Find out by playing as Zack and go back and forth between his past and present! In The First Friend, players are forced to express themselves through their character's movements and actions. Players may often think about how they would behave in certain situations but the game constantly challenges them by giving them certain set of constraints. This game is fun to play and relax during your downtime. Simple controls that are easy to grasp that works in all controls (joystick, keyboard, d-pad) Resonance Rating™ is built-in for each track that are filtered by the amount of time the tracks lasts. This rating is based on the internal statistics of tracks used in the game. That allows players who like the same type of music (favorite genre of music) to find new music. Player may opt-in to show their native language. Players may opt-in/out of using it. What's new:

Died Corporate News: September 18, 2010 Hot on the heels of last week's announcement and press release at the World Economic Forum, the European Systemic Risk Board - the Financial Stability Board's European sibling - took the occasion of the Financial Services Day on September 7, 2010 to create the latest in its series of sectoral crisis exercises. As well it should. It already has had one leg amputated and is moving to the next level of amputation - the systemic one. The ESRB, along with the International Federation of Securities Exchanges and the body representing the regional central banks, will be convening the most senior finance, treasury, and banking officials, including some government ministers, for its first ever crisis exercise beginning September 14. It is "Still 2009", a reminder of the ongoing uncertainty and gloom over the financial sector and the huge amount of capital that is still on the sidelines: "Given the chronic problems of the financial system and the urgency with which they require tackling, the ESRB is calling upon its members and all participants in financial markets to contribute to this exercise by providing a quantitative assessment of economic, financial and market impacts in three scenarios from September 14 to 17." (emphasis added) If the European Union wants to see how the contagion spreads from one financial system to another, this is a good time to watch the results, possibly for half a decade. Under a scenario designed to test the sovereign crisis (see figure 1) it looks like the economic slump would get about an extra three and a half years added to it, possibly to 2026: "The initial scenario reflects the global economic stagnation of 2009. The baseline variables comprise those that, according to major organisations, are the main contributors to systemic risk in their respective areas. It reflects the financial crisis that began in 2008. The concern here is that in its aftermath, the world economy continues to struggle, driven by weak demand and low investment, with an appreciating domestic currency resulting in a persistent current account deficit and uncertainty about what will happen with highly indebted countries. Taking into account the current global credit crunch and the behaviour of many financial institutions, the scenarios draw pessimistic conclusions with respect to the functioning of global financial markets and the stability of fiscal policy." But there is no danger in panic. The accompanying full scenario involves the risk of panic and it shows that the limits of most people's perceptive ability have been exceeded (see figure 2). Considering the Middle East crisis as a backdrop, the exercise shows it being a tail
