Internet of Things for the first time in China. It began to open doors to a new customer-orientated internet service, whereby customers could simply say: "Hey! I have new shoes on" and send data about their new Adidas shoes to their smartphones directly from the stores. At the same time, in Europe, the sportswear giant opened a blockchain-based customer data management platform. In this way, Adidas became the first global sportswear company to store personal data such as customer orders, receipts, inventory and pricing in the cloud. Customers now can see their data anywhere and can order whatever they want without any technical know-how. In the United States, the company introduced a system for collecting and analyzing customer data. This generated the creation of a unique digital ecosystem and enabled Adidas to respond faster and more quickly to the needs of customers, increasing the exchange of data. The bill is targeted at the much-criticized outdated and restrictive Canadian Passenger Ships Act which prevents crew members and passengers from wearing masks, says Martha Dacos, the lawyer who is representing the crew members in court. The currently existing ban restricts crew members and passengers from wearing masks on board Canadian passenger ships as long as they are traveling by sea. The law, which has been blamed for many deaths and illnesses onboard in the
